<autoresponder>Hi, I have been called away from my desk. I am not sure when I will be returning. My employment has turned out to be temporary. If this is an urgent matter, please forget what you're working on. Leave your office immediately. Go spell your name in a whisper of passing cloud. You are marvelous. I should have kissed you on the mouth the last time I saw you. </autoresponder>

<autoresponder>Hi, I am away from my email for the next 30-45 seconds. My body is traveling between the 22nd floor and the lobby. I will respond to your message as soon as the technology that moves this metal box along a vertical plane stops interfering with my connectivity. Thank you for your patience! </autoresponder>

<autoresponder>Hi, I cannot respond to your mail because I am a seahorse floating in stars. Please send arms and legs, hands and feet, fingers and toes. My current gestational state has not yet provided these necessary appendages. Please send them right away, along with a phone with nice big keys. Sorry for the inconvenience. My reply will hold the wonder of a newborn world. </autoresponder>

<autoresponder>Hi, if you're getting this message, it means I have turned into a werewolf. No, it's got nothing to do with a full-moon. I turn into a werewolf every time my favorite team loses. I promise to get back to you as soon as I regain human form. I also apologize in advance for killing or maiming any of you. Have a great day! </autoresponder>

<autoresponder>Hi, I apologize if I am slow responding. I am suffering a fever with high heels and strawberry hair. If you've ever suffered this fever, you know I could be in Vegas getting married by a man with rhinestone cuffs. Perhaps you should consider incorporating high heels and strawberry hair into your own long-term objectives. This fever brings a sweat you'll never get from a treadmill. </autoresponder>
